The movement for a union of citizens of Irish descent in Calgary to celebrate St. Patrick's Day is a step in the right direction. It will be a happy day for Ireland, it will be a happy day for men of Irish descent, when they receive to large all dividing and disturbing questions and agree to unite for social purposes, irrespective of the religious or national divisions in the old land. There is no reason why the old hatreds and prejudices and contests that have so long separated the Irish in Ireland should be imported to this country. If the question now at issue in the old land cannot be settled satisfactorily by the people there, they cannot be settled by the participation of the people of Irish descent in Canada; and considering this in the Territories especially, the union of all heretofore hands is essential to the success of the building up of this vast and sparsely settled country. Irishmen and men of Irish descent should have with goodwill any step that is taken to bring them in action, but that leads to that harmony of sentiment so essential to the prosperity of the land of their adoption or their birth.

It is not slow on this aspect of the coming democratic movement in the following cities to be congratulated. The form of the demonstration is one highly to be commended. They are to have a dinner in the new opera house, which will be practically a dinner in public, and open to whomsoever buys a ticket; and it is open to ladies to participate. These are features of a dinner which should prevail more generally than they do. It is to be given that the most limited company, which is an assurance that we hope will be successfully carried out. Numerous speeches will be made with a [possibly lengthy] concert to follow, which will not be tedious; and although there may be persons present bubbling over with eloquence, their speeches will keep up to a moderate volume. At all events, there are to be speeches we hope for the ladies their share. This would be an innovation which would be more readily tolerated than the presentation of a large eloquence which would be no novelty.

The public dinner, with ladies participating, and the concert of exclusively Irish music which is promised, ought to provide an entertainment in which the whole town should be glad to join; and we have no doubt that, with an auspicious effort on the part of the committee, all the representative men and women of the city will be present. Even if all who claim to be Irish or of Irish descent help part the hall should be crowded; and on occasions of this kind in Calgary people are apt to turn out without regard to nationality. There is a good, broad spirit of social friendship which we hope will always prevail, and it may be dependent upon to be in active exercise on the night of St. Patrick's Day. And it must not be forgotten that something is due from the public to the enterprising gentleman who is supplying the town with a first class public hall, sufficient to accommodate for the wants of the town for several years to come, and sufficiently well arranged to ensure every comfort and convenience that can be looked for, whether used as a concert room, public dining hall, or for other purposes. We hold that something is due to Mr. Hull on what may be the "house warming" of the new public hall under the auspices of the Irishmen and Irish women of the city.

Considering that all the influence operating to ensure a large attendance at the St. Patrick's Day dinner and concert, we have no doubt whatever of its proving an unequalled success.

The Maelcoed Stage—A Retrospect.

The first act of February was the last of the Maelcoed stage, and a rather bad mark, which consisted of the exceedingly practical and unromantic existence in Calgary of today, with the more picturesque though certainly inconvenient mode of life of Fort Calgary of the past, has disappeared. Not so very long, only ten years ago, the Maelcoed stage was the sole connecting link between Calgary and the outside world. Once every three weeks if everything went all right, a blackhead and team hauled by the Maelcoed Police Department for the use of the force fetched up to Fort Calgary from the theatre for more important matters of Fort Maelcoed a few bags of newspapers, whose news was already ancient history and letters which lapsed of time seemed to have relieved the receiver from the necessity of answering. Even then, the mail was not always so sure. Sometimes a bag would have been swept away in finding the river. Sometimes on the great plains south of the boundary line the stage driver would be too good to pull into the white-hot gates of the queer little old post on the island at Fort Maelcoed with his camp on to trouble himself about a bag or two in the way of the fight. When you wrote a letter in those days you stuck an American stamp on it and mailed it at Fort Benton, Montana Territory, U.S.A., which was the nearest postoffice available. At least you gave money to do these things with to the Maelcoed driver, who passed it on to the Benton driver, and it is much to the credit of the Maelcoed driver that he never once doubted that the money so sent would be securely applied. It is strange to look back even to the twelve years ago when the how remote and utterly out of the world this place then was. At that time all the town in the stretch of country between here and Maelcoed could pretty near be counted on the fingers on one hand and all these any way were in every other direction on the other. There was no doctor here then, even the little hospital segment in there, whose prescriptions a person might take. The chess, but most people were busy with the life of the natural born soldier, and rather to endure than to fight than to fight, so they did not do. There was a white woman by the name of Muelky and it took 20 miles of riding and mending with saddle horses and four teams to get a doctor could be summoned to her bedside from Fort Maelcoed. The writer remembers the steam-heating plant for a few minutes before the pandemic stage of the old stockade in the chill autumn night and then the flicking of the wind on the ground of the dead, to arrive to find there were no persons here in those days, except the price of the old stockade on the elbow opposite where the backyards are now, and except the fact he found out of his little chapel there was no Sunday except as a kind of off day devoted to scrubbing the floors of the Indians and halfbreeds. Neither were there any lawyers. Really they were not so used in some ways these old days, as the trial of the whiskey smuggler was summary and his shift exceeding short. There was no meddling interference with the trial of justice. The first prisoner ever detained by a lawyer in Calgary to his own lawyers and his own counsel, was a man named, got off. He had killed one side of his halfbreed wife's person full of small shot through a hole in the temple in which she was asleep. But the evidence was weak and not even the outrageous mismanagement of the case by the recently imported lawyer's clerk who defended him could prevent an acquittal. The court sat where it could there were no effects and unnecessary publicity or display. Exceeding good plain justice had been administered, and the man was sitting on the other's bed.

And these old times are gone and the old Maelcoed stage has vanished off to mingle with the rest of time. We are in another world now, an era of power, labor and foundation, having access of hand work and difficulty, to some, perhaps, of our country, and the signs are that this period will be a close and that a time of progress and prosperity beyond the dreams of the most sanguine is at hand. Great as has been the changes in Calgary and the Canadian West within the last few years, it is humanly surprising that the next decade will witness still greater and that the history of the Calgary of 1887 will appear as antique in 1907 as the recollections of 1848 now.

The End of Joe Beef.

According to the "Wor" City reviewed today, which is dated provisionally we suppose, Feb. 11, 1893, the well known Joe. Beef, Canadian, in Montreal, has been purchased for a shelter house and barracks by the Salvation Army.

Sporting Notes.

The Oxford and Cambridge boat race will be rowed this year on March 20. Last Monday, however, the British boat crew, the "Purser," Maelcoed, came for the championship of England. The race was the most one-sided ever seen in the Thames. Time 22:25.

A Strange Freak.

Mr. E. Douglas showed the human body a curious freak in the shape of a pig, for a long time, dead, through the smoking of the lamp. The piglets took the shape of a human, and in due time the body was seen. Being down the back and an accumulation of lampblack has formed a perfect head. The game, the first life and covered with a supple, malleable, and a large, which is most curious and is attracting a good deal of attention.

A Few Telling Figures.

The C. P. R. had sales for 1902 amounting to $20,000,000 as compared with $17,500,000 for 1901, showing an increase of 29,169 tons. Out of this $2,700,000 were sold to settlers in the States. The Dominion Immigration figures show that in 1902, 1901, 1900, 1899, 1898, 1897, 1896, 1895, 1894, 1893, 1892, 1891, 1890, 1889, 1888, 1887, 1886, 1885, 1884, 1883, 1882, 1881, 1880, 1879, 1878, 1877, 1876, 1875, 1874, 1873, 1872, 1871, 1870, 1869, 1868, 1867, 1866, 1865, 1864, 1863, 1862, 1861, 1860, 1859, 1858, 1857, 1856, 1855, 1854, 1853, 1852, 1851, 1850, 1849, 1848, 1847, 1846, 1845,
